Dear [REDACTED]

We are working on the report now and made very good progress yesterday. But some practical obstacles came up regarding the data input to section 2 – as well as some private factors that limit our possibility for extra work towards the deadline for the draft. So we are asking if we can send the draft on Friday? I am sorry for this, and I hope it will not cause problems on your side.

Best regards,
Jan

Hi,

I had a chat with Richard and Piers yesterday about the suggested timeline and also about the outline. They think we can follow your suggestion for timeline/milestones. But it would be good if you and I could have a brief zoom chat. What about Friday morning 9 CEST?

Best,
Jan

Thanks for the update Jan

Let us know if a zoom call would be useful – either to finalise the contract or later to discuss content.

Kind regards

Hi [REDACTED]

I need to check with Piers and Richard if the Milestone dates are OK with them. They have been on vacation but I hope to get in touch with them today. Will come back as soon as I can.

Best regards,
Jan

Dear [REDACTED]

Many thanks for your mail. All is well here.

I am interested in the work you describe. I have also been contacted by Piers about this, and we both think this is important and interesting. However, there is one significant factor that makes this very difficult, and that is the indicated timeline. I am very busy with IPCC work over the next weeks, and I also need to take some vacation with my family. This makes the timeline you indicate very challenging. As far as I understand, this is also the case for Piers.

It would be useful to know if there is some flexibility on this, and I am also interested in having a zoom meeting with you.

Again, thank you for contacting me about this.

Best regards,

Jan

Dear Dr Fuglestad

I hope you are as well as is possible given the current global situation. My name is [REDACTED] – I am working at New Zealand's Climate Change Commission. I wanted to sound you out about your availability and interest in a piece of work we'd like to commission to be done over the coming months on pathways and tradeoffs involved in the world keeping warming below 1.5 degrees. Piers Forster and Andy Reisinger recommended you to us.

New Zealand's Climate Change Commission was modelled largely on the UK Climate Change Committee, and our first set of advice on emission budgets and the direction of policies to meet them will need be finalised early next year. Alongside this advice, our Climate Change Minister has requested that we also provide advice on two issues relevant to New Zealand's climate change policies and targets:

- The level of cuts to emissions of methane that might eventually be required of New Zealand as part of a global effort to keep warming to 1.5 degrees
- Whether New Zealand's Nationally Determined Contribution under the Paris Agreement is compatible with keeping warming to 1.5 degrees (and if not how it should change to become compatible).

To help inform our advice on these questions, we would like to contract you to do a short report on global pathways consistent with keeping warming to 1.5 degrees, and the tradeoffs and choices available within those pathways – particularly as they relate to long-lived vs short-lived gases. It would likely be 1-2 weeks work over the next 4-8 weeks, and would draw heavily on existing analysis.

Is that something you are interested in discussing with us further, and would you have availability to do it?

If you are interested in hearing more about it I will be happy to send you some more detailed information and perhaps we could arrange a video call to discuss it.

Kind regards

Dear Jan

Thanks for your reply. We do have some flexibility in our timeframes. The initial proposed timeframe was very rapid so that the work could help to inform our modelling ahead of work on emission budgets. However, it could feed into our analysis at a later stage of the process. We are keen that the work is done right, more than that it is done quickly.

I have attached our more detailed document describing the work (It sounds like Piers may have sent this to you already, but sending it in case he has not). While it includes the existing ambitious timeframes, we can discuss those with you and are open to amending them to make them work.

We would be keen to schedule a zoom meeting to discuss it. With New Zealand being 10 hours ahead of Norway, that suggests an 8am Norway/6pm NZ time might be the best. How does 8am your time on Thursday 9th, or Monday 13th July suit you?

Kind regards
