23	We adapt to change as long as it is slow and planned.	2/27/2021 3:33 PM
24	Our Marae is extremely remote and we have very few whānau living in our valley now. When the time comes to relocate it will be a massive undertaking requiring multiple land owners to return home, understand the problem and be willing to act for the collective. This can't always be guaranteed as a given. Managing the identification and agreement for a new site is complex, as will seeking permission from each whānau to relocate the urupā. On top of this whānau living back home are often financially vulnerable and do not have the means to absorb the hidden costs of calling everyone home to wananga and find a way forward. Climate change and our duty to respond to the loss of our current Marae location will put enormous pressure on an already challenging situation given colonisation.	2/26/2021 8:09 AM
25	Why should we have to adapt on our own when much if what we will be responding to is not of our making? Why should we be accountable for things we are responsible for?	2/24/2021 1:37 PM

6	New Zealanders in 2016 produced 7.3 tons co2 per capita. Half that of Australians and Canadians. About the same as China. China put 38.4 gigawatts (GW) of new coal-fired power capacity into operation in 2020, according to new international research, more than three times the amount built elsewhere around the world and potentially undermining its short-term climate goals. Why are we worrying about this. We should be spending money on Schools and hospitals. That would give much better out comes for Maaori and everybody in New Zealand	3/19/2021 10:50 AM

12	Plastic waste by health care sector. I'm a support worker and we throw away daily plastic used by clients I.e. catheter bags, PEG feeding bags, plastic 'wipe' containers and more. This is daily and we have no separate disposal bins for all clients/houses in the community. We just throw them in the rubbish bins which end up in the landfill. My client alone uses 365 catheter bags per annum. There are many ACC, MoH and DHB clients throughout NZ jn the community that wrongly dispose of their healthcare waste.	3/10/2021 7:58 AM
